

Hello,

Having been involved in the broadcast industry in the 1980's and radio in general for much longer, I believed I'm qualified to make an informed opinion concerning this matter. The hallmark of broadcast radio in the United States has, as long as I recall, has been it's requirement to serve the public interest. This must continue as the primary function of broadcast radio, considering that the airwaves belong to the public. The diversified, local ownership of stations must be enforced, even at the peril of profits. Profits are simply a coincidental windfall of broadcast license stewardship, and should not be allowed to influence long standing protections of the public airwaves resource.

Regards,
Kelly Anderson
Salt Lake City, Utah